YOURSELF

It's what you do with your back One new style of hairdressing parts the hair on the right side, has a soft, wide wave over both ears and then the back hair is swirled over to the curls. You wear one of the new coiffure combs slanting across the back of your head, to hold the swirl. A glittering one is grand for evening. A second one-sided coiffure parts itself nearer the center, on the right side. The left front is brushed back from the forehead, curves in waves down over the left ear. The right part of the front has a few little bangs that curl to the right side. The over the ear like the other side. her hair, there is a one-sided effect that is obtained by merely swirling side. The Future of Dirigibles

The aviation records of the last decade are dotted with irigible accidents. In this country we have seen the Shenindoan and the Akron crash; England still recalls the loss of he R-101; going back a little farther we can remember the lestruction of the Doma, the ZR-2, and others. Each ship. when launched, was the "last word" in aerial safety and comfort; each came, inexplicably and suddenly, to disaster. Is the giant dirigible an invention which cannot, in the very nature of things, be made safe and reliable? Is this and the engineer a development which, having been experimented with at great cost in lives and money, must be abandoned? Must the conquest of the air depend henceforth solely on the airplane? Right now probably most of us would answer all of those guestions in the affirmative. And yet, even now, we might be wise to delay rendering a final verdict. Herr Eckener and the Graf Zeppelin stand as cogent arguments on the other side of the case. Lieutenant Commander Wiley, fresh from the wreckage of the Akron, urges that development of the dirigible be continued. The new Macon is yet to be tested, and the navy contains plenty of men ready to stake their lives on her soundness.

Meanwhile, we can only sorrow over the loss of the men who died in the Akron. Their deaths, and not the destruction of the dirigible, constitute our greatest loss.

Self-Sustaining Farmers

THE Department of Agriculture predicts that American

farmers during the coming year will produce a far higher proportion of their own foodstuffs than has been the case for An ever-increasing percentage of farmers, the department has found, are grinding their own flour, keeping more eggs and milk for home use, canning and preserving more

fruits and vegetables and slaughtering more animals for their Although this development was brought about by hard times, it probably represents a healthy trend. The one-crop farmtr, who buys all his food at the village grocery and turns his farm into a kind of factory for the production of one staple commodity, is especially vulnerable to any depression.

The farmer who raises his own food is at least sure that he will never go hungry. And that, in times like those through which we have been passing, is an assurance worth having.

The Future of Dirigibles

The aviation records of the last decade are dotted with irigible accidents. In this country we have seen the Shenindoan and the Akron crash; England still recalls the loss of he R-101; going back a little farther we can remember the lestruction of the Doma, the ZR-2, and others. Each ship. when launched, was the "last word" in aerial safety and comfort; each came, inexplicably and suddenly, to disaster. Is the giant dirigible an invention which cannot, in the very nature of things, be made safe and reliable? Is this and the engineer a development which, having been experimented with at great cost in lives and money, must be abandoned? Must the conquest of the air depend henceforth solely on the airplane? Right now probably most of us would answer all of those guestions in the affirmative. And yet, even now, we might be wise to delay rendering a final verdict. Herr Eckener and the Graf Zeppelin stand as cogent arguments on the other side of the case. Lieutenant Commander Wiley, fresh from the wreckage of the Akron, urges that development of the dirigible be continued. The new Macon is yet to be tested, and the navy contains plenty of men ready to stake their lives on her soundness.

Meanwhile, we can only sorrow over the loss of the men who died in the Akron. Their deaths, and not the destruction of the dirigible, constitute our greatest loss.

Self-Sustaining Farmers

THE Department of Agriculture predicts that American

farmers during the coming year will produce a far higher proportion of their own foodstuffs than has been the case for An ever-increasing percentage of farmers, the department has found, are grinding their own flour, keeping more eggs and milk for home use, canning and preserving more

fruits and vegetables and slaughtering more animals for their Although this development was brought about by hard times, it probably represents a healthy trend. The one-crop farmtr, who buys all his food at the village grocery and turns his farm into a kind of factory for the production of one staple commodity, is especially vulnerable to any depression.

The farmer who raises his own food is at least sure that he will never go hungry. And that, in times like those through which we have been passing, is an assurance worth having.
